“ Sending deepest sympathy and love. Mrs. Cohen was often mom to me, too, as I grew up and learned from her. When I was about 10 I saw, one day, she had lipstick - bright red - on her two front teeth. I said, with childlike wonderment and fear, “Mrs. Cohen, you have lipstick on your teeth!” Her reply, as she wiped the lipstick away: “Well, anybody can put it on their lips.” I’ve never forgotten this lesson, the self-confidence of a person who isn’t concerned with making a mistake but, rather, laughs it off while correcting it. This memory of Mrs. Cohen has informed my whole life forward. Grateful for the moment, for the woman, and for the joy she always led with.
