“ I miss you, cousin. I am so glad I could be there for Lexi and the kids. It's sad that some people in your family care more about material things than family ties.

“ I wanted to eulogize Noel at his service, but emotion and loss of sleep had my mind clouded that entire week. Still, that hasn't changed. Noel's brought my wife back to a constant in my head, with Noel's family visiting in and out.

I've known Noel since third grade; memories live of his childhood home; his mother, lost not long later. His father, the pet rabbit (s), brothers Marc and [Todd, the last surviving of the immediate family]. We're said to each be unique, but some stand out as such; Noel is among them. He was driven through life on passion and emotion. Noel was plagued increasingly for years by diabetes, back issues, then kidney and cardiological problems. Despite this, it astonished me; what a strong, positive attitude he consistently carried. Thanks, apparently, to his lively household of close, loving family. His daughter, Elexis. Her children, Savannah & Eli and family dog, who I understand would refuse to leave his side.
