“Wow! Now the family's adventures have come full circle, and the siblings are together once again! My wife and I first met Paul when Marty (affectionately referred to as George Washington - but that's part of an old story back when Marty was at Prentis Manor, which no longer exists except in the memories of the elite staff who were employed there to care for a segment of our community's elderly...). Where was I? Oh yes - Paul used to come to visit Marty at the Fleischman Residence. That's where we met him. He was a sharp dresser, and true to the inbred nature of these 2 brothers, Paul probably could have sold you the Brooklyn Bridge - with his slight of hand and glib tongue! Just as Marty was a successful produce dealer at one time down at the Eastern Market, Paul continued with his own wheeling and dealing during the few years that we knew him when he visited Marty. The trunk of his car was invariably loaded up with buy-outs of household items that were on their way to one of his myriad of unsuspecting customers! And if the truth were to be told - and all of us know that their sister, Clara, only spoke the truth - ihr tzvei bridder tzuzammen, mit alleh zeireh meshugassen hobben ihr gekent goot meshugeh machen!! But as I said at the start - the three siblings are together in Heaven - may Hashem have mercy on His angels!! May Paul's family be comforted by the Al-Mighty amongst the mourners of Zion and Jerusalem! Have I told you how Marty came close to ordering a TRAIN-load of produce to be delivered to...

Paul was part salesman, part gangster and all heart. He was old school, street smart and tough as nails. Martin Scorsese should make a movie about him. I was part of the “watches for $10.99” crew. Oh what times we had. So many memories. So many stories. I will miss him. Rest in peace Paul. -FJ

My grandfather Benny Harwood was good friends with both Marty and Paul, My dad Marvin worked with Paul, I remember watching Paul play billiards at cushion and cue in oak park.
